WORK EXPERIENCE

HARRI London

London, United Kingdom

Technical Designer

Mar. 2026 – Present

- My role spans multiple stages of the product development process, including pattern cutting, pattern revisions following fittings, garment construction, and tech packs.
- Alongside technical development, I also contribute to the design process when required, supporting the team from concept through to sample development.
- Working across different aspects of garment creation has given me a well-rounded understanding of both the creative and technical sides of fashion product development.

Poplar Works × London College of Fashion

London, United Kingdom

Pattern Cutter & Technologist

Feb. 2026 – Mar. 2026

- A collaborative project between Poplar Works and London College of Fashion focused on designing size-adjustable school uniforms for children in Kakuma Refugee Camp, while producing accessible technical documentation to train women in garment production, supporting the development of women-led and women-owned local businesses under resource-limited conditions.
- Designed and produced size-adjustable school uniform samples for children in Kakuma Refugee Camp using limited fabrics and trims, applying low-waste pattern cutting while maintaining functionality and durability.
- Developed clear and detailed technical files/instructional booklets documenting sewing and construction processes, accessible for women with basic sewing skills to support women-led local production.
